

In a heap, elements can either move upwards or downwards.

(Taking a min heap as an example)

If an element is inserted, it may move upwards towards the root.

If the minimum element is deleted, it is first replaced with the rightmost leaf, and then the root element may move downwards.

Regardless of the operation being performed in the heap, it will result in the movement of elements either upwards or downwards.